

GERMANY WILL STOP DUELLING

Reichstag Is to Be Asked to Abolish the So-Called Field of Honor

BERLIN, June 12. — A determined effort is to be made during the present Reichstag to force for all but an end to duelling in Germany. Many a brave German officer in the army or highly respected citizen in civil life, has died on the so-called "field of honor" because he did not have the moral courage to face the sneers of friends and enemies and be ostracized by his associates if he refused to fight.

Angered by the death of Lieut. von Heering, a nephew of Gen. von Heering, Minister of War, who was shot and killed recently in a duel with Lieut. von Puttkamer, another officer of nobility, a strong movement has been started to effectively kill out the duelling craze. This has crystallized in a bill to be placed before the Reichstag which provides summary dismissal from the army or navy for any officer participating in a duel either as principal or second, and a long term of imprisonment for civilians who engage in this method of "wiping the stain from their honor." Tradition of "honor" that can only be satisfied by sticking a sword into the vitals of the offender or puncturing him with a pistol bullet, is so strong in German army, navy and university circles, that there is some doubt whether such a measure will find sufficient friends in the Reichstag to pass it.

The German army or navy officer and university student is as "touchy" about his "honor" as is a woman about her "beauty." If German duels were anything like the French affairs there would be little objection to them. But they are not. The German duel is a grim, deadly tragedy. It is rare that both men walk from the field. One man is usually killed or badly wounded, and it is not infrequently that both are badly hurt. The principals and second engaged in the duel with all the grim seriousness so characteristic of the German trait. Lieut. von Puttkamer shot down his brother officer at fifteen yards after von Heering had shot him through the hand.

What aroused public opinion and that part of the press not influenced by the military system and traditions was the fact that Gen. von Heering, Minister of War, defended the duel. "A man who refuses to fight a duel does not belong in the Corps of Officers," he declared before the Reichstag. For a moment this declaration took the breath from the Reichstag members, and then followed such an attack upon the Minister, later taken up by the press, that it was believed it would result in von Heering's retirement as Minister of War.

Later the Minister of War modified his statement and declared that he had been misunderstood. He admitted that duelling was an "evil," but that the tradition of duelling was so deep in the German army that it could not be eradicated by force. In response to a resolution by the Social Democrats demanding the immediate dismissal from the army or navy of any officer who engages or assists in a duel, Gen. von Heering declared that he would do all he could to "restrain" duelling. It is doubtful whether the Reichstag will be satisfied with "restraint." The Minister of War was of the opinion that duels could not be stopped entirely until more stringent laws were enacted to protect the honor of officers and to afford them redress. Just why army and navy officers require special legislation for the protection and redress of their honor Gen. von Heering did not explain in detail.

Shunned by his associates and practically ostracized because he refused to challenge a brother officer who is alleged to have made remarks affecting his honor, Surgeon-Sambeth, a prominent officer in the medical corps of the army, recently tendered his resignation after the Emperor refused to pass upon the question. Dr. Sambeth declined to challenge or fight a duel on the ground that his resignation did not permit of his killing a man for "injured honor."

RICHARD CROKER MAY ADOPT FAIR ANNETTE

LONDON, Eng., June 5. — Annette Kellerman, the "diving Venus," who is filling a vaudeville engagement in London, seemed genuinely amazed and thoroughly annoyed when told by The World correspondent of the rumors that Richard Croker wishes to adopt her as his daughter. The story was based on the fact of her having been seen two days in succession in Mr. Croker's box at the theatre.

"It is the most ridiculous story I have ever heard," Miss Kellerman exclaimed. "It simply staggers me. Uncle Richie is the dearest old man I ever met, but my great friend in the family is his niece, Miss Stella Bowman, whom I met on the Adriatic. I am giving her physical culture exercises. We became very friendly. She invited me to stay at Glencairn for two days. I stayed three weeks afterward and Mrs. Bowman gave me the happiest three weeks of my life in London. I sincerely hope this report will not break our friendship, but she will understand how absurd this story is. They invited me to their party today and also in the Oaks on Friday, and to stay at Glencairn during the Dublin horse show week."

Having expressed herself with indignation at the rumor, Miss Kellerman took from her purse a telegram dated May 20, on which day she made her first appearance at the Oxford Music Hall. The telegram was from Dublin and read:

"Sent flowers from here this morning. May your success break all records. Will see you June 2. Love from Glencairn, (Stella)."

Glencairn is Mr. Croker's residence in Ireland.

GAMBLERS PENALIZED AS FORMER BAIL-JUMPERS

Fifteen Japanese gamblers arrested yesterday afternoon, had their bail fixed at twenty dollars by Special Officer Ergan, who recognized the men as bail jumpers.
William Rawlins, attorney for the gamblers, argued against the high bail on the grounds that the men could not be judged bail jumpers until they had been proven as such.
Judge Robinson was appealed to by phone, and an informal session between the police official, William Rawlins and the judge was held over the wire. Rawlins was defeated and ordered to give the high bail. His check was refused and cash demanded.
Another telephonic court session was held, resulting in Rawlins producing cash. In the evening a game between five Japanese was broken up in a Kekaunike street tenement, and the participants arrested.
